Told to Gabby Flett by Grandma Irene Desjarlais

This picture was taken in 1946. It was a 100 year celebration for since the missionaries first got here. People were here from all our surrounding communities to celebrate with us. There were white tents all over because that is what people brought with them to sleep in. I was only 5 years old but I remember eating my first ice cream and getting my first ride on a kiddie ride train. Until that evening, when they started lighting up what must have been fireworks but being 5 years old I was terrified. I got my grandma so mad because she wanted to stay and watch, but she had to take me home.
